

SEPT. 14, 2010

What? The community coming together to get things done. Volunteer teams from local companies and service organizations partner with area non-profit agencies, neighborhoods and schools for a day of work and fun. Ideas for projects are limited only by the imagination.

“Employees of The Post and Courier have participated in Day of Caring for years and I can’t imagine it going on without us. It’s a fabulous way to connect with co-workers while helping people who need it. And you know what? It’s a lot of fun.”

Bill Hawkins, 2010 Day of Caring Chair
The Post and Courier

JK Harris

Who? In 2009, 6,300 people got involved: teams from companies (large and small), service organizations, groups of friends and families.

When? Tuesday, September 14, 2010.

How? Starting in mid-July, visit www.tuw.org and choose the Day of Caring link. Agencies and schools may register projects May 15 through July 7. Volunteer teams may view and pick projects July 14 through August 18.

Alcoa

Where? All over the Lowcountry – Berkeley, Charleston and Dorchester counties

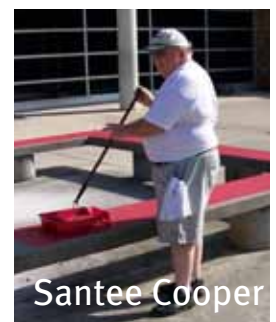

Companies -- A day to build teamwork and improve morale while demonstrating your corporate commitment to a stronger community.

Volunteers -- Have a blast with your co-workers while learning about your community and making it a better place.

Agencies and Schools -- A fabulous opportunity for eager volunteers to tackle projects that need doing and to learn about the needs you address and the people you serve.

Wachovia

Santee Cooper

“Thank you! Thank you! Thank you, Trident United Way! Thanks for giving us this awesome day so that we can give back to our community!”

Teresa Lucas Pitts
Charleston Water System

“Day of Caring lets us introduce members of our community to what we do. More importantly it conveys a special message of hope to our children -- that people truly care about them.”

Kendra Wilson
Callen-Lacy Center for Children